Mt.Fuji is the highest mountain in Japan, and there are risks of altitude sickness and sudden weather changes in summer. Outside of the official climbing season of Mt. Fuji, unstable weather condition increases the risk of disasters and accidents. Therefore, climbers are not allowed to climb Mt. Fuji without sufficient knowledge, technique, and experience, and reliable equipments and climbing planning based on the Safety Guideline of Climbing Mt. Fuji. Mt.Fuji is an active volcano. Please pay attention to the information of volcanic activities.

[CAUTIONS]

- This chart shows physical strength and technical difficulties that are required in each route under good weather condition. The levels of difficulty increase under harsh weather. There are various risks like bad weather and remaining snow when climbing. It is necessary for climbers to take these risks into consideration.
- The weather and earthquake may increase the levels of difficulty of climbing routes.
- First time climbers of each route are required to be accompanied by an expert.
- In times of disaster, there is no guarantee of rescue in climbing routes of any difficulty. Thorough preparation is recommended.
- Purchasing insurance is recommended for emergency.

[technical terms]

Route Finding The ability to figure out safest way when a route is difficult to or cannot be found.
